Sydney and Brandon's wedding was full of love, fun, and COLOR-- they even had 🎉 confetti! 🎉

We just posted their photo booth pics on our website:

Shenandoah Valley Buy Fresh, Buy Local

Today is the last day to register for the 2012 Virginia Farm-to-Table Conference and Buy Fresh Buy Local Networking Mixer.

This conference is going to have it all- notable speakers from across the country, networking opportunities for producers and retail and wholesale buyers, good music and great food. If you're a producer, buyer, school or university official, community or agricultural development officer, legislator, administrator, or other key food system stakeholder, we have designed this conference with you in mind.

If you haven't taken a look at the agenda, you can do that here (<http://Buylocalshenvalley.us5.list-manage.com/track/click...>) . On the first day, we'll be discussing the question, "How can we grow more food while taking care of our natural resources?" We'll be looking at sustainable farming, conservation, and soil health with a specific focus on challenges and opportunities for mid-level farms. On the second day, we'll be looking at ways entrepreneurs can finance their food- based businesses. We'll hear from experts on community-based investment and models of collaboration and cooperation and learn what's working for other folks across the country.

Another terrific meeting today to plan events for Food Day 2012. The actual date of Food Day is Oct. 24, but since there is so much local food and farm activity in the Shenandoah Valley, we'll be celebrating throughout the entire month of October with farm tours, farm to table breakfasts, and events to engage university students with foods and farms.

About to post events on fooddayshenvalley.wordpress.com. It's going to be great. Stay tuned!
