

Can Chow Chow Dog Breed be kept as an ESA? Guide

Emotional Support Animals is one of the most discussed topics because there is a conflicting situation between how to recognize if a dog is an ESA or not. One of the most discussed ESA dog breeds is Chow Chow. Before getting into the details of the dog, one should get an ESA Letter. The letter is more like legal or legit permission that allows someone to keep the dog and travel with it. One should make sure that the ESA letter is authentic and you can evaluate it by comparing it with the legit ESA samples that are available on the internet

Commonly, people say that Chow Chow is aggressive and he has absurd behavior but there is no legit proof of this quality. Some people also compare the disposition of Chow Chow with that of a cat that has some major qualities required of a service dog such as independence, aloofness, stubbornness, reservedness, and dignity. Generally, Chow Chow is not shy and neither has he had an aggressive nature. It makes the dog not only the best fit for emotional support but also one of the Best Guard Dogs. The dog loves to play with the people he already knows, but he is not comfortable when he is around strangers.

One of the most important facts is, the dog breed is comparatively hard to train and it is nothing important. There are many guard dog breeds that are very tricky to train, rather few of the dog breeds require a lot of time for training. Chow Chow is one of them. Also, there are many people saying that Chow Chow is more arrogant and the dog is least cooperative.

Yes, the description of arrogance and shy attitude is true but only in the case of the people who are not family members or those who are strangers. I personally think it is something very positive and it is something for which emotional support animals are kept because they are meant for the services and care of the owner, not for the public.

One should make sure that the emotional support animal letter is as per the legal obligation and the requirements proposed by the government should be verified. Coming to the discussion of Chow Chow, honestly, there is no apparent reason to say that the dog cannot be kept as an emotional support animal because it has all the qualities that a good dog should have. There are several misconceptions about the dog because the qualities of the dog, that are innate to all the dogs are highlighted in Chow Chow more than the other dogs and it is nothing more than a misunderstanding that needs to be clarified.

From the analysis of the traits of Chow Chow, it is observed that the dog is one of the best fit for emotional support, the dogs are generally very healthy. Then, the dog is more like a homebody. The dog is stable for a variety of homes ranging from small apartments to palaces. Then, the dog requires very little maintenance when compared to the other dogs and it makes them good emotional support animals.

In addition to being an emotional support animal, Chow Chow can be one of the best guard dogs. The dog is very loyal and it makes them one of the best breeds that are not only easy to maintain and take care of, but can provide the best company to the owner. So, one can easily conclude that Chow Chow is one of the best emotional support animals one can have without any doubt.

Useful Resources:

Airline Requirements for Traveling with an Emotional Support

How Do You Keep a Dog House Warm in the Winter?

Legit way of getting an ESA letter from an online service provider

How Old Is Your Dog In Human Years | Dog Age Chart 2021

Step by step instructions to make your own snuffle mat | Amazing Techniques

10 Dog Breeds That Help With Anxiety & Lend Pressure | Guide 2021